MULTICULTURAL WOMEN'S SUMMER INSTITUTE

UD 024 447

The Institute is the first part of a three-part project funded by the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education. Following the Institute, participants will organize dissemination conferences or activities in their own locales and will contribute to a publication of articles on and resources for teaching multicultural courses on women.

The Women's Studies Program of the University of Illinois at Chicago offered a three-week interdisciplinary summer Institute to develop multicultural courses on women. Participants included approximately 25 teachers from colleges and universities around the country who gathered from July 10—July 30, 1983, to discuss incorporating material on women of color into interdisciplinary courses on women in the United States. Sessions were devoted to the historical and contemporary work, activities, and culture of underrepresented groups of women, effective pedagogical techniques, and the preparation of model syllabi. The Institute included people who teach interdisciplinary courses on women both inside and outside of Women's Studies Programs, Afro-American/African-American/Black Studies Programs, Asian-American/Pacific Islander Studies Programs, Chicano/Hispanic/Latin American/Puerto Rican Studies Programs, and Native American/American Indian Studies Programs.
